Such was the state of preparation when Jackson reached the City of New Orleans; and such indeed seem a sufficient answer to the charge preferred it continued to the termination of the invasion, only so far as his own exertions enabled him to effect that Washington City was within Jackson's division, and that he the rules and passes of the service. has been infrusted with their transportation, has halted on the way for the purpose of private speculation. Depend upon it, this supineness, this regligence, this criminality let me call it, of which we witness so many instances in the agents of government, must finally lead, if it be not corrected, to the deleat of our armies, and to the disgrace of those who superintend them. It is impossible I respect for the public authorities, to the deleat of our armies, and to the disgrace of those who superintend them. It is impossible I respect for the public authorities, the captain of the beat much. The kentucky troops have been delayed by adverse winds, but when they come, not more than a third are armed, and those indifferently. I have none in the facts detailed in this letter, there is no mistake. The captain of the beat who undertook to be the carrier of the arms, on reaching New Ottons, after all the danger had subsided, defended the tradiness on the way, by showing the captain of the beat who undertook to be the carrier of the arms, on reaching New Ottons, after all the danger had subsided, defended the tradiness on the way by showing the captain of the beat who undertook to be the carrier of the arms, on reaching New Ottons and the properties of the public authorities, "that pending the enquiry before Congress of this Seminole campaign, he never appeared to the substance of either House, where, by the rules of both, he had the sight and privilegs to be. In this course of respect ludes of the trade of prespection of the substance of respecting for one the floor of either House, where, by the cut of the never, by the rules of both, he had the sight and privilegs to be. to be the carrier of the arms, on reaching New Orleans, after all the danger had subsided, defended his tardiness on the way, by showing the contract he had entered into with the agent of the government, which secured to him the right of tarrying on the road with a view to his own "private speculation." And if this, at so critical and dangerous a period, seems too marvellous for belief, a reference to the archives of the War Denartment will establish its accuracy.

Law and right, not "his good pleasure," were the cause.

A treaty had been concluded with Spain, and by virtue of an act of Congress, and commission from the President of the United States, General Jackson became Governor of Florids, and in July, 1821, took possession of the country. By the 7th article of that treaty it was stipulated as follows: "The officers and troops of His Catholic Majesty in the territory hereby ceded to the Uhad ended, and only three days before the enemy sion of the places occupied by them, given within six months, &c." Jackson again addressed the Secretary of War. place in the hands of the troops had been furnished, heremarks: "I am sensible, however, that we have a thousand times greater cause to rejoice, than to repine. Heaven, to be sure, has interposed most wonderfully in our behalf, and I am filled with grantide when I look bick to what we have a seasond, yet I grieve that we did not with he withdrawn in six months. more wisdom and more industry, use the means with which she had blessed us. Again and again I must repeat, we have been always too backward with our preparations. When the enemy come-we begin to think of driving him away, and scarce-ly before."

Here then, is that " extraordinary exertion"that state of preparation, of which Mr. Roberts speaks; a preparation so full and so complete, as speaks; a preparation so full and so complete, as that nothing remained for General Jackson on his carrival at New Oricans, but to fight. Wonderful accuracy, indeed! Truly as it relates to fairs, Mr. Roberts would make a most intolerable historian. The common legends of olden time, would be better entitled to confidence; but it seems the general was not merely ordered, but it seems the general was not merely ordered, but was in fact "urged to repair there." The accusation intended to be made, the inference designed to be adduced is, that the importance of the Mississippi had never occurred to him, and that he was planning and straaging the defence of points of infinitely less importance; and was at latifound at the city of New Otleans for the reason only that he was "traced" on the mandate of the country to be discovered. to repair there."
